A Note From the Editor

As editor-in-chief of Diabetes Spectrum, I often ask friends and colleagues to consider submitting their clinical work for publication. Most often, the responses I hear from those individuals deep in the trenches of diabetes care are, “I don’t like to write,” or “I cannot write.” Yet these are the same people who participate in the everyday care and education of people with diabetes. It is through their clinical expertise that we all learn to be better educators and providers of diabetes care.

Over the past several months, many excellent articles were submitted for publication to Diabetes Spectrum. In an effort to publish as many of these articles as possible, for this issue only we have chosen to publish five feature articles on a variety of topics instead of our usual From Research to Practice section. We hope that you enjoy reading these articles and agree that, every once in a while, it is important to deviate from the usual.

Warmest regards,

Davida F. Kruger, MSN, APRN-BC, BC-ADM
